

Mario D'Artagnan
Musical Resume

Mario D'Artagnan began his musical career at the age of seven when he first began studying classical accordion with the Gary Chiaramonti School of Accordion and Piano. Mario studied privately for ten years. At the age of eleven, he competed in the city of Trenton, New Jersey talent contest and won.

He began performing professionally at the age of fifteen, and was the youngest member of the local musicians union. Mario had a keen interest in composing, and had several compositions copyrighted during his teen years. After serving four years in the U.S. Air Force, Mario returned to music and was a member of the trio, The Esquires from 1975 until 1985.

After pursuing other interests, Mario has re-entered the music scene again and performs with One Class Act, southwest Florida's renowned duo. He also took an interest in the alto saxophone and incorporates this instrument with the duo's repertoire.

Mario enjoys sharing his gift with people of all walks of life.
